Airline buys dad's bedtime story

Describing himself as "just a dad making up stories for his kids", Stephen Holmes could never have imagined creating a children's book that would, quite literally, take off. It all began when Holmes's eldest daughter convinced him to turn one of his bedtime stories into a real book. The Great Hot Air Balloon Adventure follows two friends on a night balloon ride. To help get his book off the ground, Holmes sent a copy to Virgin Atlantic airline, and was shocked when they ordered 2,000 copies to hand out to children on overnight flights. For every copy sold, Holmes has said that he will make a donation to a children's charity.
